This course has been constructed to present to the internist selected current developments in the field of internal medicine. The biochemical, pathophysiological and surgical aspects of diseases will be discussed when indicated. Emphasis has been placed upon diseases of the cardiovascular system, the endocrine glands, the gastrointestinal tract, infections, hematology, pulmonary diseases, the collagen diseases, conditions involving the joints and other subspecialty fields.

The various conditions will be discussed by those having special knowledge and experience in the subject under discussion. Numerous panel discussions have been arranged and, wherever possible, an effort has been made to schedule more or less related subjects in sequence.

In addition to the numerous discussions to be presented by members of the teaching staff of the Henry Ford Hospital, there will be certain presentations by eminent guest speakers. Opportunity for questions and answers will be provided after each paper.

Anyone wishing to enroll in this course should apply to Mr. Edward R. Loveland, American College of Physicians, 4200 Pine St., Philadelphia, 4, Pa.
